Theatrical.
The long list of performers, professional and amateur, who have volunteered to assist to night for Miss Elsie's benefit, may serve to show in what estimation she is held as an actress and a woman bravely executing her part—perhaps not an easy one—in the drama of real life. It must be very well known to our playing community that the stage is, so to speak, a dependence not to be depended on otherwise than as a history during the last few months might open to them an instructive page in the matter of deferred hopes and unsuccessful attempts. Let those who can admire a smiling look maintained under the most unpromising circumstances as an expression of their sympathy this evening. The performances may be depended on, and as a matter of course, will be well attended.
